In his book Good to Great, Jim Collins tells the story of Admiral James Stockdale, the highest-ranking American prisoner of war in Vietnam. ① Known for his unbreakable character and resilience, Stockdale described the two defining characteristics of American captives who were most likely to survive the brutal conditions of a Vietnamese prison. First, they openly faced and accepted ② rather than ignored or dismissed the harsh facts of their difficulty. Second, they never stopped ③ believing that they would someday get out. In other words, while they did not run away from reality, accepting the brutal truths about their current conditions, they never lost hope ④ which all would work out well in the end. By contrast, both those who believed that they would never get out and those who believed that they would be freed within an unrealistically short period of time ⑤ were unlikely to survive.

I was ① seated in the office of the vice-president of sales of a company I'd been consulting with for several years. The vice-president was interviewing someone for the position of regional sales director and asked me to listen in. The man ② interviewing was an experienced, successful salesman. Still, it was an important career meeting for him, and he was nervous. His response to the pressure of the interview was ③ to talk too much. The applicant felt ④ uncomfortable and was attempting to fill the uncertainty of the moment with sound. While trying to make a good impression, he presented himself poorly. A little conscious breathing would have enabled him to feel better about ⑤ himself and allowed him to be more calm and clear.
