Why do we continue to think of negotiation as a win-lose proposition? For one thing, society encourages us to engage in hard bargaining.

- (A) Such an attitude is difficult to unlearn because hard bargaining may have worked in the past, so changing to something that is seen as weaker or emotional is not very appealing. Negotiators often feel that any change would compromise their principles.
- (B) But being flexible does not require compromising principles for the sake of an agreement. Being flexible means protecting and fulfilling your own interests, while finding creative ways to minimally satisfy the interests of others as well.
- (C) Certainly in our society we learn to win at games, beat opponents, and get the best grades, car, or deal, regardless of anyone else's needs.

Even between equally talkative cultures, there are differences in conversational style. In American society, we tend to believe that, even in casual conversation, only one person should speak at a time.

- (A) In the late 1980s, the U.S. president's wife, Nancy Reagan, complained to the press about Raisa Gorbachev, wife of the Soviet president: "From the moment we met, she talked and talked — so much that I could barely get a word in."
- (B) Yet in many other countries, it is normal for a listener to chime in when someone is talking in order to show enthusiastic participation or involvement with others. Such logic seems to elude many in the United States.
- (C) Probably unaware of the "one speaker at a time" ethic, Mrs. Gorbachev might have been wondering why her U.S. counterpart never said anything — and made her do all the conversational work.
