In a study conducted by Karen O'Quinn and Joel Aronoff, participants were asked to negotiate with a seller over the purchase price of a piece of art. Toward the end of the negotiation, the seller made a final offer in one of two ways. Half of the time he said that he would accept $6,000, while the other half of the time he gave the same final price but also added a little humor ("Well, my final offer is $6,000, and I'll throw in my pet frog"). Those few moments of attempted humor had a large effect, as participants made a much greater compromise in their purchase price when they heard about the frog. It seemed that the brief humorous comment momentarily put the participants in a good mood and encouraged them to be more giving.
