All his life, a young boy dreamed of becoming a police officer. But he couldn't know that his wish would be the inspiration for the largest wish-granting organization in the world, the Make-A-Wish Foundation. The organization has enriched the lives of children with life-threatening medical conditions through its wish-granting work. The Foundation's mission reflects the life-changing impact that a Make-A-Wish experience has on children, families, donors, sponsors and entire communities. The Make-A-Wish Foundation traces its beginning to one boy's wish.

When the day arrived, Chris was welcomed by three squad cars and a police motorcycle ridden by Frank Shankwitz. Then (a) he was treated to a ride in a police helicopter. They finished the day by swearing Chris in as the first—and only—honorary state trooper. The next day, Cox enlisted the assistance of the company that manufactured the uniforms for the Arizona Highway Patrol, and within twenty-four hours, its people presented Chris with an official patrolman's uniform. With a smile that lit up the room, (b) he accepted it.

For as long as he could remember, a boy named Chris Greicius dreamed of someday becoming a police officer. But there was a major obstacle standing in his way. He had leukemia, and (c) he was not expected to make it to adulthood. When he was seven years old, Chris's battle with the disease took a turn for the worse, and that's when a family friend, Tommy Austin, who was a U.S. customs officer, arranged for Chris to come as close as (d) he could to living his dream. First of all, he made a call to Officer Ron Cox in Phoenix and arranged for Chris to spend the day with officers from the Arizona Department of Public Safety.

Two days later, Chris died in the hospital, his uniform close at hand. Officer Shankwitz was saddened by his little friend's death, but he was grateful that he had experienced the opportunity to help Chris. And he also realized that there were many children in circumstances similar to Chris's. That prompted Shankwitz to co-found the Make-A-Wish Foundation. In about thirty years since then, (e) he and his organization have enlarged the experiences of more than eighty thousand children. There is nothing as valuable—or rewarding—as adding value to the lives of others.
