In a recent report, people who have to smile for a living were found to be more prone to health problems. Most people need to put on a mask for at least part of the day; basic human courtesy requires that we sometimes curb our emotions, whether anger or frustration or passion. The solution to this problem is to find what Brian Little calls a “restorative niche.” The niche can be sharing your feelings with a trusted friend, writing whatever comes to mind in a personal journal, or simply spending time alone in your room. Depending on their constitution, some people may need ten minutes to recover from the emotional deception, while others may need a lot longer. The key during the recovery period is to be real, fully yourself, to do away with pretense and to allow yourself to feel any emotion that arises.

Every global opinion poll shows religion declining among the youngest generation. While traditional religious affiliation is declining in the most technologically advanced societies, spirituality is increasing. Spirituality refers to the very individual quest to find meaning in the broader cosmic scheme of things. The Global Values Survey has been tracking the shift toward spirituality since 1981. Those surveyed are asked: “How often, if at all, do you think about the meaning and the purpose of life? Often, sometimes, or never?” The percentage of those who say “often” has increased dramatically. In Canada, 37 percent said “often” in 1981 and 52 percent in 2001. In the United States, Americans who say they are “spiritual but not religious” have increased by 10 percentage points since 1999. In 2006, 40 percent of U.S. adults described themselves as “spiritual but not religious.”
