A distinctive characteristic of the African elephant is its extremely large ears. Besides their important use in hearing, the ears serve as _____, similar to those of the fennec fox, which is a small nocturnal fox found in the Sahara of North Africa and has unusually large ears. They provide a large surface area through which runs an extensive network of blood vessels. When the animal is hot, the blood vessels expand and rise above the skin, so that blood running through them is more exposed to the air. Spreading of the ears and ear-flapping are characteristically seen when elephants stand in the shade on hot days because of high-temperature. The action increases the air currents over the blood vessels so blood is cooled more efficiently, helping reduce the body temperature.

Minerals are necessary for the body to build tissues or assist in various body functions. Minerals are found in all body tissues. They cannot provide energy by themselves, but in their role as body regulators, they contribute to the production of energy within the body. Minerals are found in water and in natural (unprocessed) foods, together with proteins, fats, and vitamins. Humans obtain minerals by eating plants grown in mineral-rich soil or by eating animals that have eaten such plants. The specific mineral content of food is determined by burning the food and then chemically analyzing the remaining ash. Most minerals in food occur as salts, which are soluble in water. Therefore, the minerals leave the food and remain in the cooking water. Using this cooking liquid improves the flavor as well as the nutrient content of foods to which it is added.

In a study conducted by Karen O'Quinn and Joel Aronoff, participants were asked to negotiate with a seller over the purchase price of a piece of art. Toward the end of the negotiation, the seller made a final offer in one of two ways. Half of the time he said that he would accept $6,000, while the other half of the time he gave the same final price but also added a little humor ("Well, my final offer is $6,000, and I'll throw in my pet frog"). Those few moments of attempted humor had a large effect, as participants made a much greater compromise in their purchase price when they heard about the frog. It seemed that the brief humorous comment momentarily put the participants in a good mood and encouraged them to be more giving.

Almost all teenagers have difficulty with their families. Even the healthiest boys and girls push their parents to validate them as adults before the parents are ready to accept the new situation. All teenagers do some distancing as part of their individuation process. But healthy boys and girls know that their parents love them and stay connected in important ways. They keep talking and seeking contact. Even as they rage at their parents on the surface, a part of them remains loyal and connected to them. Teenagers generally manage to stay close to their families and maintain some family loyalty. They usually have someone in the family whom they love and trust. Through all the chaos of adolescence, they keep the faith with this person.

To say that we need to curb anger and our negative thoughts and emotions does not mean that we should deny our feelings. There is an important distinction to be made between denial and restraint. The latter constitutes a (A) desperate / deliberate and voluntarily adopted discipline based on an appreciation of the benefits of doing so. This is very different from the case of someone who suppresses emotions such as anger out of a feeling that they need to present a facade of self-control, or out of fear of what others may think. Such behavior is like (B) healing / closing a wound which is still infected. We are not talking about rule-following. Where denial and suppression occur, there comes the danger that in doing so the individual stores up anger and resentment. The trouble here is that at some future point they may find they cannot (C) contain / attain these feelings any longer.

Children who have been listened to sensitively are likely not only to be accepted by others but to accept themselves as well.

When children grow up, the quality of listening they experience from the adults around them is almost as vital for their psychological development as food is for their physical development. (①) Their sense of worth is intact. (②) Furthermore, such children have had the safety to express and explore their feelings. (③) Thus they have been helped to acquire the ability to listen to and trust their own feelings, which is an essential part of listening to others. (④) In addition, having at least one parent who listens well provides children with a secure base from which to engage in exploratory behavior. (⑤) Children who have not been adequately listened to are likely to be more out of touch with their feelings, insecure, anxious, angry, and aggressive.

According to sociologists and anthropologists, one of the most widespread and basic norms of human culture ① embodies in the rule for reciprocation. The rule requires that one person ② try to repay, in kind, what another person has provided. By obligating the recipient of an act to repayment in the future, the rule for reciprocation allows one individual to give something to another with confidence ③ that it is not being lost. This sense of future obligation within the rule makes ④ possible the development of various kinds of continuing relationships, transactions, and exchanges that are beneficial to the society. Consequently, all members of the society are trained from childhood ⑤ to obey the rule or suffer serious social disapproval.

One reason why the definitions of words have changed over time is simply because of their misuse. There are a growing number of examples where the incorrect meaning of relatively commonplace language has become more widespread than the original intention or definition.

- (A) Now, imagine that an angry customer sent you a letter about the service he received in one of your stores. If your reply is that you ‘perused his letter,’ he is likely to get even more angry than he was before.
- (B) The word ‘peruse’ is one of them. Most people think that to ‘peruse’ something means to ‘scan or skim it quickly, without paying much attention.’ In fact, this is the exact opposite of what ‘peruse’ really means: ‘to study or read something carefully, in detail.’
- (C) But the word has been misused so often by so many people, that this second sense of it — the exact opposite of what it actually means — has finally been accepted as a secondary definition and as far as most people know, it is the only definition.

- ① (A)–(C)–(B) ② (B)–(A)–(C)
 ③ (B)–(C)–(A) ④ (C)–(A)–(B)
 ⑤ (C)–(B)–(A)

Words & Phrases

A child can only improve her talking when she's ready for it; you can't force-feed language, because the baby just won't accept it. _____ (A) _____, a baby who is two months old can imitate and learn to use vowel sounds, but she can't manage consonants yet. She'll begin to pick them up in another couple of months, though. The baby's first year of language learning holds a number of keys to her later talking and thinking abilities. For example, her early babblings may give an idea of how intelligent the child is going to be; heavy babblers often grow up to be clever children. _____ (B) _____, it can be disappointing that babies who can speak before they're expected to don't necessarily grow up to be more articulate or clever, because very early speech is more like imitation than considered utterances.

The French horn is from Germany. The Great Dane has no connection to Denmark. Cold-blooded animals often have warmer blood than warm-blooded animals. A cold is not caused by the cold. Death Valley is teeming with life. Starfish are not fish. These are just a few things I've been keeping in my little "Irony Facts" file on my computer. Irony is named for "the Greek comic character Eiron, a clever underdog, who by his wit repeatedly triumphs over the boastful character of Alazon." But the stuff above is a different kind of irony. These ironies are a function of our ridiculously inaccurate language. I feel we need someone to come in and clean it all up, a Rudy Giuliani of English who would crack down on all lazy, loitering, leftover-from-other-eras words. But that'll never happen because the inertia of bad ideas is a powerful force.

If someone were to say, “He is a liberal talker,” we might interpret liberal as a label for that person’s political stance, or we might take it to mean that he or she is very talkative. Unless the user of the word offered a clue as to the intended meaning, we would have to rely on mere guesswork. If we were to hear a movie critic say, “Eddie Murphy’s role was better than most,” we would be left to speculate about whether the allusion to the role referred to the character part he was asked to play or his acting. Moreover, the claim that the role was better than most might be thought to mean that it was better than the majority of the parts he has been given in films or that his performance excelled that of most of the other performers in the film.

Pulitzer Prize-winning psychiatrist Robert Coles urges his students at Harvard Medical School to read George Eliot’s Middlemarch and Walker Percy’s The Moviegoer. Unlike standard textbooks, these novels explore in human terms many of the ethical issues that physicians face. Dr. John Stone of Emory University School of Medicine recommends Leo Tolstoy’s The Death of Ivan Ilyich and Albert Camus’s The Plague for their insights into death and dying. “Literature,” Stone says, “will help lead a young doctor to proper sensitivity; it will help to find the proper words for the proper moment; even to place the doctor, vicariously, in the patient’s hospital bed.” Through literature, young doctors can learn to understand other people not only objectively from the outside but subjectively from the inside. Indeed, they can learn _____.
